

Information on Kittens:

Congratulations!

You have a new precious kitten! Welcome to the kitten stage, a time of cuteness and craziness. Kittens are absolutely wonderful, so let's talk about some tips and tricks for making your time with them even better.

Offer both wet and dry food at a young age, making sure to offer different flavors and textures. This broadens their tastes at a young age, making it easier if they need to be put on special diets in the future.

Start touching their paws, ears, mouth, and tail - basically, mess with them to get them used to humans handling them. Use positive reinforcement (petting, treats, play) to reward them when they don't react negatively.

In a similar vein, expose them to different sounds, people, and pets if you're able to. Make sure this is in a safe and enclosed environment, and to use treats and toys to make sure the kitten is having fun and not getting overwhelmed.

Use different types of toys and treats for training as well. There are various types of toys that imitate the hunting drive, and cats can learn tricks just as well as dogs (or better, in our opinion). The Indoor Pet Initiative website has many ideas and tips on stimulating your cat's mind as well as body.

If your environment and resources allow it, consider another kitten as a buddy for yours. Adult cats tend to be more independent, but kittens love having another kitten to play with.

Get your kitten checked out by a vet! We can evaluate any testing or preventative medicine they might need, assess their overall health, and discuss any questions you might have to help you be the best kitten owner possible.
